Why should I create a will?

You should have a will because it is an effective way to control what happens when you die. Without one, the state will decide who receives your property, without any regard as to what you would have preferred. Your house may fall in the hands of a relative you have never met, when you would have given it to your unmarried partner.

Perhaps you would have given your property to a good friend or a charity, but without a will it would go to your family. To avoid these types of situations, it would be to your benefit to create a will to guarantee that your property passes to the people that you select in the manner that you desire.
